

ABSTRACT

Right sided native valve infective endocarditis is commonly encountered in intravenous drug abusers with devastating consequences and high mortality. Staphylococcus Aureus is the frequently isolated etiological agent in this group of patients and tricuspid valve is the commonest site. Infective pulmonary embolism originating from the vegetation causing pulmonary infarctions is also not uncommon.