

Abstract

Thyroid storm is one of the endocrine emergency that should be identified and treated promptly. Although hyperthyroidism usually have a positive chronotropic effect on heart, its negative dromotropic effect can result in bradyarrhythmia which may render it difficult to diagnose. We report a case of middle age woman presented with thyroid storm accompanied by intermittent atrioventricular block.