

Abstract

Empyema necessitans is a rare condition characterized by the accumulation of pus in the extrathoracic soft tissue due to decompression of intrathoracic empyema by extending through the parietal pleura and chest wall. The patient in this report presented with subcutaneous soft tissue swelling in the left side supraclavicular region with no history of pneumonia or empyema.