

Abstract

Hepatopulmonary syndrome is an uncommon complication of chronic liver disease. It is the abnormal arterial oxygenation is caused by intrapulmonary vascular dilatations in liver disease, portal hypertension or congenital portosystemic shunts. There is no effective medical treatment for hepatopulmonary syndrome. However, liver transplantation is considered as the definitive treatment.