

Abstract

Primary biliary cholangitis (PBC) is a chronic autoimmune disease. It is a rare disorder with a high probability of progression to cirrhosis and liver failure. A minority will have milder form of the disease where the risk of death from liver related complications is low. Many patients have significant long-term morbidity due to fatiguability and pruritus. The purpose of this case report is to describe a case of a lady with primary biliary cholangitis.