

Abstract :

Dengue fever and leptospirosis have common clinical presentation and both these conditions are more commoner in rainy season. Differentiating them is a clinical challenge to the clinician and serological diagnosis of dengue fever should not misdirect from diagnosing leptospirosis as a coinfection. We here report a case of coinfection of dengue hemorrhagic fever and leptospirosis complicated with tubulointerstitial nephritis.