

Abstract

Acute Fatty Liver of Pregnancy is a rare emergency which usually occur in third trimester of pregnancy and may mimic HELLP syndrome. We report a 24-year-old primiparous mother who presented with vomiting and jaundice, was diagnosed with Acute Fatty Liver of Pregnancy which was complicated with DIC. Early detection of this condition is crucial for immediate termination of pregnancy, together with plasmapheresis and other supportive measures which will lead to complete recovery as in our case.