

Abstract

Waardenburg syndrome is a rare genetic disorder. It's often characterized by minor defects in structures arising from neural crest, pigmentation anomalies and varying degrees of deafness. We report a 54-year-old female who presented with a chronic hearing impairment which leads to the diagnosis of Waardenburg syndrome (WS). Only limited number of adult cases were reported in Sri Lanka.